

Ireland ; in all which he had raised troubles, and new questions, and lastly in that which might concern the safety of his royal person, by his exposition of the laws in cases of high treason.

“ That beside the actions themselves, his Majesty, in his princely wisdom, hath made two special observations of him, the one that he having in his nature not one part of those things which are popular in men, being neither civil nor affable, nor magnificent, he hath made himself popular, by design only, in pulling down government. The other, that whereas his Majesty might have expected a change in him, when he made him his own by taking him to be of his council ; it made no change at all, but to the worse ; he holding on all this former channel, and running separate courses from the rest of the Council, and rather busying himself in casting fears before his Council concerning what they should not do, than joining his advice what they should do.

“ That his Majesty, desirous yet to make a further trial of him, had given him the summer vacation to reform his reports, wherein there be many dangerous conceits of his own, uttered for law, to the prejudice of his crown, parliaments, and subjects, and to see whether by this he would in any part redeem his fault : but that his