

universal conflagration, of a new heaven and a new earth, as well as of the destiny of the blessed, agrees so fully with Mazdeism even in details, that here again the influence of this system must be admitted.¹ And so, too, the Mazdean belief, that the soul traverses a series of heavens,² has probably influenced 2 Cor. 12² ff., perhaps also Heb. 4¹⁴, 1 Tim. 3¹⁶, and particularly Jude⁹—just as the Mazdean comparison of the resurrection body with a new heavenly garment has influenced the corresponding passages in Paul's Epistles (2 Cor. 5¹ ff.) and the Apocalypse.³

I might add to these the very ingenious but hardly convincing comparison of Rev. 1¹³ with the "high-girt" Vayu of Yt 15⁵⁴ (and Anāhita in Yt 5⁶⁴) by Dr James Moffatt (Expositor's Greek Testament, in loc.).⁴ How far we may accept Prof. Clemen's comparisons will appear from the notes below. I only remark further that the atmosphere of Jewish and Parsi apocalyptic is sufficiently alike to make us ready to believe in a real connexion. Just as the Jews picked up and adapted an unmistakably Iranian story like Tobit, they may very well have used the figures and imagery of Magianism for their national vision-literature. It is far from easy to prove conclusively that they really did so, but

² P. 171 f., depending mainly on Bousset. The three stages of the ascent to Garōnmāna in the Hadhokht Nask (Yt 22¹⁵) are the best evidence of this idea in Parsism. I should not object to it. And yet, was not a Jew bound to be influenced by his own language, in which "heaven" is plural? Must we go further afield?

³ P. 174. But the one Avestan passage quoted (Ys 55²) only says that the Gathas are like food and clothing! The Bundahish passage is equally distant from the point.

⁴ Clemen rejects this (p. 154).
