Gen. xix. a.

23 And man saide: *this is now be bone of my bones, and fleshe of my fleshe, she shalbe called^(v) woman, because she was taken out of man.

24 *For this cause shall man leaue his father and his mother, and shalbe ioyned with his wyfe: and they shal become one fleshe.

25 And they were both naked the man and his wife, and were^(r) not ashamed.

(r) The shame of nakedness is a token of our nature corrupted.

This figure is spoken of in the .x. vearse of this Chapter before, and representeth the situation of Gods garden.

If there be any kyngdome vnder heauen that is excellent in beautie, in abundance of fruites, in plenteousnes, in deltyes and other gyftes: they which haue written of countreys, do prayse aboue all, the same that this figure representeth. wherfore, with the prayles of those wyters, Moyses exalteth this paradise, as duely belonging vnto it. And it is very well lyke, that the region or kyngdome of Eden hath ben situated in that countrey, as it appeareth in the .xxxviii. Chapter of Esaias the .xli. vearse, and in the .xxviii. of Ezechiel the .xlii. vearse. Moreover, where as Moyses sayde that a flood dyd procede from that place: I do interprete it, from the course of the waters, as if he shoulde haue sayde that Adam dyd inhabite in the flooddes syde, or in the lande which was watered of both sydes. Howebeit, there is no great matter in that, eyther that Adam hath inhabited vnder the place where both flooddes come together towarde Babylon and Seleucia, or aboue: It is sufficient if he hath ben in a place watered of waters. But the thing is not darke nor hard to vnderstande howe this floodde hath ben deuised in foure heades. For they be two flooddes which be gathered in one, then they seperate them selues in diuers partes. So in theyr ioynynge and flowynge together, it is but a floodde, wherof there is two heades into two chanelis from aboue, and two towarde the sea, when it begynneth to seperate it selfe abrode. But to declare vnto you the diuersities of the ryuers names, besydes their vsuall and principall appellations, and howe they be called as they passe through eche prouince, with the interpretations of the same, I thynke it rather tedious and combresome, then profitable. wherfore the simple sense of Moyses is, that the garden wherof Adam was the owner, was watered with waters, because that the course of this floodde was there, whiche was deuised into foure heades.
