

rated, 11, 1-10: Israel's exiles from all quarters will return; the rivalry of Judah and Ephraim will be at an end, vv. 11-16; and the restored nation will express its gratitude to its Deliverer in a hymn of thanksgiving and praise (c. 12).

In 10, 28-32 Isaiah represents the Assyrian as advancing against Jerusalem by the usual line of approach from the north. It does not appear, however, that either Sargon or Sennacherib actually followed this route; and the prophet, it is probable, intends merely to draw an effective imaginative picture of the danger threatening Jerusalem, and of the manner in which (v. 33 f.) it would be suddenly averted. The historical situation implied by the prophecy agrees with that of the year 701 B.C., when Sennacherib, having completed the reduction of the rebellious cities of Phoenicia, was starting for the south, intending to reduce similarly Jerusalem, and the Philistine cities of Ashkelon and Ekron: at a time when the Assyrians were actually approaching from the north, their intended attack might readily take shape in the prophet's imagination in the manner represented in 10, 28-32 (comp. Isaiah, pp. 66 f. 70-73. Similarly Ew., Schrader, KAT. p. 386, Stade).

Prof. W. R. Smith (Proph. 297 ff.) places the prophecy at the beginning of Sargon's reign, regarding 10, 5 ff. as an ideal representation of the ambitious pretensions of the Assyrians, and of the failure to which they were doomed, not suggested by any special historical occasion. (Similarly Dillm.; Kuen. § 43. 5 places it towards the end of Sargon's reign.)

II. C. 13—23. Prophecies dealing (chiefly) with foreign nations. C. 1—12 centre entirely round either Judah or Israel; the present group comprises prophecies, in which, though there is often an indirect reference to one of these countries, the primary interest lies, as a rule, in the nation which they respectively concern. The prophets observed closely the movements of history: they saw in the rise and fall of nations the exhibition of a Divine purpose; and the varying fortunes of Israel's nearer or more distant neighbours often materially affected Israel itself. These nations were, moreover, related to Israel and Judah in different ways: sometimes, for instance, they were united by ties of sympathy and alliance; in other cases they viewed one another with mutual jealousy and distrust. The neighbouring nations, especially, being thus in various ways viewed with interest by their own people, the Hebrew prophets not unnaturally included them in their prophetic survey. The foreign prophecies of Isaiah are distinguished by great individuality of character. The prophet displays a remarkable familiarity with the condition, social or physical, of the countries with which he deals; and seizes in each instance some characteristic aspect, or feature, for notice (e.g. the haughty independence of Moab, the tall and handsome physique of the Ethiopians, the local and other peculiarities of Egypt, the commerce and colonies of Tyre).

13, 1—14, 23. On Babylon. In this prophecy the Jews are represented as in exile, held in thralldom by the Babylonians, but shortly to be released in consequence of the capture of Babylon by the Medes (13, 17). C. 13 describes the mustering of the assailing forces on the mountains, the terror of their approach, the capture and sack of the city, the fewness of the survivors (v. 12), and the desolation which will mark thereafter the site of Babylon. 14, 1—2 states the reason of this, viz. because the time has arrived for Israel to be released from exile: "For Jehovah will have compassion upon Jacob, and will again choose Israel, and settle them in their own land." 14, 3—20 the prophet provides Israel with an ode of triumph, to be sung in the day of its deliverance, depicting, with extreme beauty of imagery, and not without a delicate under-current of irony, the fall of the Babylonian monarch from his proud estate: vv. 21—23 he reasserts the irretrievable ruin of the great city.

The situation presupposed by this prophecy is not that of Isaiah's age. The Jews are not warned, as Isaiah (39, 6) might warn them, against the folly of concluding an alliance with Babylon, or reminded of the disastrous consequences which such an alliance might entail; nor are they threatened, as Jeremiah threatens them, with impending exile: they are represented as in exile, and as about to be delivered from it (14, 1—2). It was the office of the prophet of Israel to address himself to the needs of his own age, to announce to his contemporaries the judgments, or consolations, which arose out of the circumstances of their own time, to interpret for them their own history. To base a promise upon a condition of things not yet existent, and without any point of contact with the circumstances or situation of those to whom it is addressed, is alien to the genius of prophecy. Upon grounds of analogy the prophecy 13, 2—14, 23 can only be attributed to an author living towards the close of the exile and holding out to his contemporaries the prospect of release from Babylon, as Isaiah held out to his contemporaries the prospect of deliverance from Assyria. (Comp. below, p. 230.) The best commentary on it is the long prophecy against Babylon, contained in Jer. 50—51, and written during (or at least on the eve of) the exile, which views the approaching fall of Babylon from the same standpoint, and manifests the same spirit as this does. As the prophecy only names the Medes, and contains no allusion to Cyrus or the Persians, it is probable that it was written shortly before 549 B.C. (in which year Cyrus overthrew the Median empire of Astyages: the Persians uniting with the Medes, after successes in Asia Minor and elsewhere, captured Babylon in 538).

14, 24—27. On the Assyrian. A short prophecy declaring Jehovah's purpose to overthrow the Assyrian army upon the "mountains" of Judah.

The date is no doubt during the period of Sennacherib's campaign against Judah in 701. The prophecy has no connexion with what precedes. It is directed against Assyria, not Babylon; and it anticipates, not the capture of the city of Babylon, but the overthrow of the hosts of Assyria in Judah.

14, 28—32. On the Philistines. The Philistines are in exultation at the fall of some dreaded foe: Isaiah warns them that their rejoicing is premature, that the power which they dreaded will recover itself, and prove even more formidable than before. The Assyrian is approaching in the distance (v. 31<sup>b</sup>); Philistia will suffer severely at his hands (vv. 30<sup>b</sup>. 31<sup>a</sup>), though Zion, in the strength of its God, will be secure (vv. 30<sup>a</sup>. 32<sup>b</sup>).

The title (v. 28) suggests that "the rod which smote" Philistia was Ahaz, and assigns the prophecy to 728 [or 715] B.C. But the connexion of thought appears to require the foe alluded to in v. 29 to be identical with the foe alluded to, more directly, in v. 31, i.e. the Assyrian. If so, Sargon will be the "snake" of v. 29, and Sennacherib the more formidable "serpent flying about," and the date will be some short time after Sargon's death in 705. The Philistines might naturally feel elated upon receiving news of the murder of Sargon, who had defeated Hanno of Gaza at Raphia in 720, and captured Ashdod in 711. That Sennacherib severely punished the Philistines, appears from his own inscription (Isaiah, p. 67 f.).

C. 15—16. On Moab. The prophet sees a great and terrible disaster about to fall upon Moab, desolating the country, and obliging the flight of its inhabitants, c. 15. He bids the fugitives seek safety in the protection of the house of David, and send tokens of their submission to Jerusalem; for there, as he knows, the violence of the Assyrian aggressor will soon be stilled (cf. 29, 20), and a just and righteous king will be sitting on David's throne (cf. 9, 5-7), 16, 1-5. But the haughty independence of the Moabites prevents their accepting the prophet's advice; and the judgment must accordingly run its course, 16, 6-12. Vv. 13-14 form an epilogue. The prophecy, as a whole, had been delivered on some previous occasion: Isaiah, in the epilogue, affirms solemnly its speedy fulfilment.

The dates both of the original prophecy and of the epilogue, are matter of conjecture. The epilogue may be assigned plausibly to a period shortly before Sargon's campaign against Ashdod in 711, when Moab is mentioned as intriguing with Philistia and Egypt (Isaiah, p. 45). But to what date the prophecy itself belongs is very uncertain. The expression heretofore in v. 13 is ambiguous: it may denote a comparatively short interval of time (2 Sa. 15, 34), or one that is much longer (Ps. 93, 2). The prophecy may have been written by Isaiah some 25 years before, in anticipation of the foray made by Tiglath-pileser upon the districts east of Jordan in 734, which (according to the notice 1 Ch. 5, 26) extended as far south as Reuben. But the style and tone of 15, 1-16, 12 impress many critics as different from that of Isaiah; and hence they suppose it to have been delivered originally by some earlier prophet, but to have been adopted and reinforced by Isaiah. The terms of 16, 13 (which in no way connect the preceding prophecy with Isaiah himself) rather support this view. There are analogies for the reproduction (and partial modification) by one prophet of a passage written by another: comp. 2, 2-4 with Micah 4, 1-3; Jer. 49, 7-16 and Obad. 1-9. 16; and the use made by Jer. himself of this prophecy (see the reff. on RV. margin. of Jer. 48). The invasion (as the Moabites flee in the direction of Edom) appears to take place from the North; Judah is represented as strong enough to defend the fugitives; and the territory N. of the Arnon (i.e. Reuben and part of Gad) is occupied by the Moabites. This combination of circumstances suits the reign of Jeroboam II.; and the original prophecy has accordingly been referred to the occasion of the subjugation of Moab by that king, pre-supposed by 2 Ki. 14, 25, when the powerful monarch Uzziah was ruling over Judah—the author being supposed to be a prophet of Judah who sympathized (15, 5, 16, 10 f.) with the suffering Moabites (so Hitzig, Reuss, Wellh. in the Encycl. Brit. xvi. 535; W. R. Smith, Proph. pp. 91 f., 392; Dillm.). Ges., Ew., Cheyne, Kuen. (§44), Baudissin, also, attribute 15, 1-16, 12 to an earlier prophet than Isaiah, but without attempting to define its occasion more particularly. 16, 3<sup>b</sup>-4 (which is in harmony with Isaiah's style and thought) may be conjectured, if this view be adopted, to be an addition made to the original prophecy by Isaiah himself (Cheyne).

17, 1-11. On Damascus. Isaiah declares the impending fall of Damascus, to be followed shortly by that of Ephraim as well, vv. 1-5. A remnant will, however, escape, who will be spiritually transformed, and recognise Jehovah as the sole source of their strength, vv. 6-8. The ground of Ephraim's ruin is its forgetfulness of Jehovah, and its adoption of foreign cults, vv. 9-11.

The prophecy is parallel in thought to 8, 4, though, from its containing no allusion to hostilities with Judah, it may be inferred (Ew. Del. Ch. Kuen. Dillm.) that it was written before the Syro-Ephraimitish war had commenced.

17, 12-14. A short but singularly graphic prophecy, describing the ocean-like roar of the advancing Assyrian hosts, and their sudden dispersion.

In general conception (though the figures used are different) the prophecy resembles 14, 24-27, and may be assigned to the same period.

C. 18. On Ethiopia [Heb. Cush]. The king of Ethiopia, alarmed by intelligence of the approach of the Assyrians, is summoning his troops from different parts of his empire, vv. 1-2. Isaiah declares to him that his anxiety is needless: the plans of the Assyrians will be intercepted, and their hosts overthrown, independently of the arms of Ethiopia, vv. 3-6. Hereupon the Ethiopians will do homage to the God of Israel, v. 7.

The prophecy may be assigned, like the last, to the year 701. An advance upon Egypt lay always within the plans of the Assyrians: and the Ethiopians might well fear that Sennacherib, when he had conquered Judah and the Philistines, would pursue his successes, and make an endeavour to add not Egypt only, but Ethiopia as well, to his empire. In point of fact, Sennacherib was advancing towards Egypt when his army (at Pelusium) was smitten by a pestilence (Hdt. ii. 141; Isaiah, p. 81 f.).

C. 19. On Egypt. A period of unexampled collapse and decay, affecting every grade and class of society, is about to commence for Egypt, vv. 1-17, to be succeeded by the nation's conversion and spiritual renovation, vv. 18-25.

The prophecy is a remarkable one, both on account of its many allusions to the characteristic habits of the people and features of the country, and for the catholicity of the picture with which it closes (Assyria and Egypt, the one Judah's oppressor, the other its untrue friend, to be incorporated, on an equality with Israel itself, in the kingdom of God).

The date of the prophecy is not certain; but it is at least a plausible conjecture that it was written in 720 B.C., when Sargon defeated the Egyptians at Raphia. Sargon did not "rule over" Egypt (v. 4); but it is not necessary to suppose that Isaiah has here a definite person in view; he probably merely means to say that, in the political disorganization which he sees to be imminent, the country will fall a prey to the first ambitious and determined man who invades it. In point of fact, Sargon defeated the Egyptian arms both in 720 and in 711; Sennacherib did the same in 701; Esarhaddon penetrated into Egypt, and reduced it to the condition of an Assyrian province, c. 672; Psammetichus, a Libyan, made himself master of it shortly afterwards, c. 660, and revolutionized the policy of its former kings by opening it for the first time to the Greeks. Ew., Stade, Dillm., Kuen. (§ 43. 23-25) assign the prophecy to the period after Sennacherib's retreat in 701.

C. 20. On Ashdod. While Ashdod was besieged by the Assyrian troops in 711, Isaiah walks the street of Jerusalem in a captive's garb, continuing to do so for three years, in order to prefigure the shameful fate that would befall Egypt at the hands of the victorious Assyrians.

The date is fixed by Sargon's inscriptions, which allude to the siege of Ashdod, and imply that the revolt of the Philistines, which led to it, was carried through with promises of help from Egypt. Isaiah's symbolical act was doubtless meant indirectly as a protest against the Egyptianizing party in Jerusalem, and intended to impress forcibly upon the people of the capital the folly of reliance upon Egypt.

21, 1-10. On Babylon. The prophet in imagination sees Babylon besieged by an eager and impetuous foe, vv. 1-2: the vision agitates and appals him, vv. 3-4: the issue, for a while, appears uncertain, but in the end he is assured that the city has fallen, vv. 5-9; and he announces the result as a duty imposed upon him, but with no sense of satisfaction or relief, v. 10.

The prophecy has been commonly referred to the capture of Babylon by the Medes and Persians under Cyrus in 538 B.C. This view is open to two objections: (1) no intelligible purpose would be subserved by Isaiah's announcing to the generation of Hezekiah an occurrence lying nearly 200 years in the future, and having no bearing on contemporary interests; (2) it does not account for the alarm and aversion with which the prophet contemplates the issue (vv. 3, 4, 10), so different from the exultation displayed elsewhere by the prophets when announcing the fall of the great oppressing city (c. 13, 2-14, 23; c. 40-48; Jer. 50-51). The first of these objections would be obviated by the supposition that the prophecy is really the work of an author writing towards the close of the exile (Ew. Hitz. &c.); but even so the second would still retain its force. Hence the prophecy has been referred by Kleinert, Stud. u. Krit. 1877, p. 174 ff., Cheyne, and the present writer (Isaiah, p. 96 ff.) to a siege of Babylon by the Assyrians in Isaiah's own time. The inscriptions show that Merodach-Baladan made repeated efforts, in the time of Sargon and Sennacherib, to free Babylon from the Assyrian yoke, and that the Assyrians on three separate occasions, B.C. 710, 703, and 696, besieged and entered the rebellious city. As Merodach-Baladan had probably (c. 39) some understanding with Hezekiah, the struggle between him and the Assyrians would be watched with interest in Judah: the success of the latter would mean the punishment of those suspected of being implicated with him. This success (perhaps in 710) Isaiah finds it his duty to announce. His human sympathies are with his own people: he foresees the sufferings which the present triumph of Assyria will entail upon them ("my threshing," &c. v. 10); and hence the distress with which the prospect fills him (v. 3 f.), and the apparent unwillingness with which he delivers his message. This view of the prophecy has not, however, found favour with recent writers on Isaiah (Delitzsch; Kuen. § 43. 10; Dillm.), who agree in supposing it to refer to the conquest of Babylon by Cyrus, and ascribe it accordingly to a prophet living towards the close of the exile.

21, 11-12. On Dumah (i.e. Edom). A call of inquiry reaches the prophet from Seir (Gen. 36, 8 f.): he replies, in dark and enigmatic terms, that though the "morning" (i.e. brighter days) may dawn for Edom, it will quickly be followed by a "night" of trouble; for the present no more favourable answer can be given.

21, 13-17. On 'Arāb. A tide of invasion is about to overflow the region inhabited by 'Arāb and Kedar (v. 17); the Dedanite caravans passing through it have to seek refuge in the woods: the people of Têma bring supplies to the fugitive traders. Within a year Kedar will be so reduced in numbers, that only an insignificant remnant will survive.

'Arāb denotes not Arabia (in our sense of the word), but a particular nomad tribe inhabiting the N. of the Peninsula, and mentioned Ez. 27, 20 f., with Dedan and Kedar, as engaged in commerce with Tyre. Kedar was a wealthy pastoral tribe, 60, 7. Jer. 49, 29. Têma lay some 250 miles S.-E. of Edom. Sargon's troops were engaged in war with the Philistines in both 720 and 711: and it may be conjectured that these two prophecies were delivered in view of an expected campaign of the Assyrians in the neighbouring regions in one of these years.

22, 1-14. A rebuke, addressed by Isaiah to the inhabitants of the capital, on account of the undignified temper displayed by them when their city was threatened with an assault by the foe. V. 1 describes the demeanour of the people; vv. 2-3 the events which had preceded; vv. 4-5 the grief and shame overwhelming the prophet in consequence; vv. 6-12 the hasty measures of defence which had been taken by the people, and the inappropriate temper manifested by them at the time and subsequently: v. 13 is the prophet's rebuke.

The prophecy belongs probably to either 711 or 701 B.C. In 711 B.C. Sargon's troops were in the neighbourhood of Judah (engaged upon the siege of Ashdod); and as Judah is mentioned at the same time as "speaking treason" against him, it is possible that some collision may have taken place with Sargon's soldiers, resulting in a panic and defeat, such as Isaiah describes.<sup>1</sup> The objection to referring it to 701, the year of Sennacherib's invasion, is its minatory tone; for in the other prophecies belonging undoubtedly to this period, Isaiah makes it his aim to encourage and sustain his people: but this difficulty may be overcome by referring it to an episode in this invasion—by supposing it to allude, for instance, to a panic occasioned by the first conflict with the Assyrians (W. R. Smith, Proph. p. 346; Dillm.), or else to have been spoken by the prophet after Sennacherib's retreat, in condemnation of the temper shown by the people while the invasion was in progress (Guthe, Sörensen, Kuenen, § 43. 19-21).

22, 15-25. On Shebna. Shebna, a minister holding in Jerusalem the influential office of Governor or Comptroller of the Palace, is threatened by Isaiah with disgrace and banishment; and Eliakim, a man of approved views, is nominated as his successor.

It is evident that Shebna represented a policy obnoxious to Isaiah—probably he was one of the friends of Egypt. The prophecy must date from before 701; for in that year (36, 3. 37, 2) Eliakim is mentioned as holding the office here promised him by Isaiah, and Shebna occupies the subordinate position of "Scribe," or secretary.

C. 23. On Tyre. In picturesque and effective imagery, the approaching fall of Tyre, the great commercial and colonizing city of antiquity, is described, vv. 1-14. After seventy years of enforced quiescence, however, Tyre will revive, and resume her former occupation; but her gains, instead of being applied to her own profit or adornment, will be consecrated to the service of Jehovah, vv. 15-18.

Isaiah expresses here, in a form consonant with the special character of Tyre—as before, in the case of Ethiopia, 18, 7, and Egypt, 19, 18 ff.—the thought of its future acknowledgment of the true God: the commercial spirit, by which it is actuated, will not be discarded, but it will be elevated and ennobled.

The date of the prophecy depends partly upon v. 13. This verse is difficult and uncertain: but if the rendering of RV. be correct, the prophet points, as a warning to Tyre, to the punishment recently inflicted upon Chaldæa by the Assyrians—probably in 710-09 or 703 (p. 195); and the prophecy will have been written shortly before Sennacherib's invasion of Phœnicia in 701 (Cheyne, W. R. Smith, Proph. p. 333; cf. Isaiah, p. 106). But the "Chaldæans" are introduced somewhat unexpectedly; and Del. (whose rendering of the received text is too forced to be probable) inclines to adopt the emendation of Ew. and Schrader (KAT. p. 409 f.) כנענים Canaanites for כשדים, the verse then referring, of course, to the fate impending on Phœnicia itself. Kuenen (§ 42. 23), finding this verse inexplicable, disregards it, and assigns the prophecy to the period of Shalmaneser's siege of Tyre (between 727 and 723 B.C.), related by Josephus (Arch. ix. 14. 2).

III. C. 24-27. These chapters are intimately connected
