

are open to the suspicion of having been coloured by their transmission through Jewish hands. Notice in 6, 9. 10. 12 the technical expressions of the Jewish law; in v. 10 "savour of satisfaction; in v. 12^a a phrase characteristic of Dt. (p. 94, No. 35). The dialect in which it is written (including the edicts) is the Western, or Palestinian, Aramaic (p. 471).

6, 19-22 (where the Hebrew recommences) the compiler (as is plain from the phraseology) speaks again in his own person.¹

The second section of the book, c. 7-10, dealing with Ezra's own age, there is no reason to doubt, is throughout either written by Ezra or based upon materials left by him. 7, 27-9, 15—with the exception, as it seems, of occasional glosses or slight additions made by the compiler—is thus an extract from Ezra's own memoirs. But 7, 1-10 is certainly not Ezra's work, though doubtless composed on the basis of Ezra's materials; it is manifestly a summary account of Ezra, prefixed by the compiler as an introduction to the excerpt from Ezra's memoirs which follows.

In 7, 1-10 notice (a) the omission of Ezra's immediate ancestors (for Seraiah was contemporary with Zedekiah, 2 Ki. 25, 18. 21, 130 years previously to Ezra's time); (b) the fact that vv. 7-9 anticipate c. 8; (c) the expressions of the compiler in v. 10 (p. 503, Nos. 6, 7; esp. 2 Ch. 12, 14. 19, 3. 30, 19). The phrase in vv. 6 end. 9 end. will be naturally taken from Ezra's memoirs (see 7, 28). In 7, 27-9, 15, the clause in 8, 20 "whom," &c., for instance, reads like an explanatory gloss; notice also ו, never besides in Ezr. Neh., and only twice in Ch., I 5, 20. 27, 27; the last clause of the verse includes a phrase of the compiler's (p. 503, No. 12). And 8, 35 f. (unlike the context) is written without reference to Ezra himself; it is not improbable therefore that it may have been condensed by the compiler from Ezra's own more detailed and personal description. The decree of Artaxerxes, 7, 12-26, as is evident from the terms of 7, 27, must also have stood in Ezra's memoirs, though it may have been cast into its present form by one familiar with the terminology of the Jewish sacred books (see vv. 13^b [p. 504, No. 23]. 15. 16. 17. 24. 26; comp. Ewald, i. 191). The dialect, as before, is the Palestinian Aramaic. In substance, it is undoubtedly genuine (Stade, ii. 153).

C. 10, though the immediate sequel of c. 9, is distinguished from it by the use of the third person, and also by being in parts considerably less circumstantial (see especially the brief and incomplete notices in vv. 15. 16 f.): at the same time, in other respects the particulars are full and graphic (vv. 9^b. 13); so that in all probability the narrative has merely been somewhat altered in form, and abridged, from the memoirs of Ezra.¹

Neh. 1, 1—7, 73^a is an excerpt, to all appearance unaltered, from the memoirs of Nehemiah,—the register, 7, 6—73^a (relating to the time of Zerubbabel), being, of course, as expressly stated in v. 5^b, an earlier document found by Nehemiah, and incorporated by him in his memoirs.

In Neh. 7, 73^b—c. 10 Ezra reappears; and both Ezra and Nehemiah are mentioned in the third person (8, 1—6 &c.: in 8, 9. 10, 1 alone Nehemiah receives the Persian title, “the Tirshatha” [cf. 7, 65. 70. Ezr. 2, 63 of Zerubbabel]). The connexion of the section with 1, 1—7, 73^a is also imperfect; for 7, 73^b. c. 8 is not the sequel to 7, 4—5 (Neh.’s purpose to class the people genealogically), but relates to an entirely different matter, viz. the people’s engaging to observe the Mosaic law. It cannot therefore be regarded as a continuation of Nehemiah’s narrative, though it is not questioned that it is based upon a well-informed, contemporary source, perhaps here and there modified by the compiler: by many critics this source is supposed to be the memoirs of Ezra.

So Ewald, Hist. i. 192; Berth. p. 8; Schrader, Eintl. § 237; Ryssel, pp. xvi, xx; Oettli, p. 150; and at least for 9, 6—10, 40 (except the list of names, 10, 3—14 [2—13]) Stade, Gesch. ii. 153, 178, 179, who points to the great similarity of the prayer in c. 9 with that in Ezr. 9 (in Neh. 9, 6 the words And Ezra spake should very possibly be restored from the LXX: so Berth., Ryssel, Stade). It is true, the section exhibits some affinities with the style of the compiler; but they are not here sufficiently numerous or marked to indicate identity of author: they are rather (as in the case of Ezr. 7, 27—c. 9) due to the fact that the theme is in part similar (the functions of the Levites, theocratic ordinances, &c.), and that some of the expressions used by the Chronicler were already current in Ezra’s time. It is remarked justly by Kuenen, that in point of grammar and literary style Neh. 7, 73^b—c. 10 stands on a much higher level than the narratives which proceed from the pen of the Chronicler: so the prayer in c. 9, for instance, shows no traces of his peculiar mannerisms. For details of the style, see Kuenen, § 34. 13.

To c. 11, on the other hand, the remark in 7, 4 forms a natural introduction,² though the narrative is hardly continued uno
